KAISER'S HEIR EXPLAINS HIS WAR OF DEFENSE AGAINST THE ALLIES

(By Associated Press)
AMSTERDAM, Sept. 4.—The German idea of victory is the intention to "hold our own and not let ourselves be vanquished," according to a published interview with the German crown prince. He said this was clear to him from the moment England entered the war. He said: "I found a majority of the Americans don't know what they are fighting for, but we feel the effect of the entry of the Americans."

"The Americans sent over much material," he continued, "and are now sending much human material. We must not be understood to mean that we want to annihilate the enemy. We mean, however, to hold our own."

Reverting to the question of what nation wanted war, the crown prince said: "It was clear England would take advantage of the opportunity. Belgium after all was only a pretext. England intervened because German competition was unbearable. We are fighting for our existence. I repeat our aim, therefore, can only be to safeguard ourselves. Enemy assaults doubtless will be continued for some time, but our enemies must themselves see they will not be able to attain their aim. Our troops are fighting splendidly. I attribute to their courage the fact that such colossal superiority in strength does not crush us. Enemy attacks and withdrawals on our front in several places often is wrongly interpreted in some circles, and some of our people who are too accustomed to a continuous advance. When a battle occurs wherein the enemy makes the attack we have to defend ourselves. We must not forget we are waging a war of defense. War is one on annihilation for the enemy, not for us."
